Blaze at 3d and K Streets Southwest
Results in $22,050
Loss.

Fire Scare on Street Car Results
From a Short-Circuited Wire.

Three alarms of fire were sounded yesterday afternoon about 5:30 o'clock to call thirteen companies of the fire department to the vicinity of 3d and K streets southwest, where a fire occurred in buildings owned by Samuel Springmann. The fire started on the second floor of 228-30 K street and spread to Mr. Springmann's home at 224.

Fire Marshal Nicholson inspected the building and estimated the entire damage at $22,050. The fire, it is reported, started in the trousers establishment of Marina Brothers, on the second floor of the building, and burned through the roof.

Details of Losses.

Water damage to the machine shop of Harry C. Crase, on the lower floor, is estimated at about $10,000. H. P. Goldsborough, an inventor, lost about $5,000. He had many valuable models stored on the top floor, where Mr. Springmann had a quantity of theatrical scenery stored, and a twelve-thousand-dollar engine that was being built in Crase's shop for Mr. Goldsborough was damaged by water.

Damage to the effects of the tailoring establishment was estimated at $1,500, while the damage to Mr. Springmann's residence, chiefly by water, is established at $1,000. The origin of the fire was not determined.

Fireman William M. Green of No. 7 truck company cut his hand while at the fire. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Blaze on Street Car.

A short-circuited wire on a street car at 13th and F streets northwest set fire to the insulation last night about 7:45 o'clock and caused a fire scare. The blaze attracted the attention of a pedestrian, who sounded an alarm of fire, but the car was some distance away when fire engines reached the scene.

Fire in the kitchen of William Sylvester, 629 North Capitol street, yesterday afternoon, caused $20 damage. The fire resulted from trouble with the kitchen stove.

The contents of a trash wagon at Columbia road and 17th street northwest caught fire yesterday afternoon. Firemen extinguished the flames before the wagon was badly damaged. The driver in charge of the team became frightened and ran away.

A lighted match dropped on a pile of trash at 449 O street last night started a fire that alarmed occupants of the premises.

MEAT ANIMAL PRICES

ARE LOWER THIS YEAR

Decline in Hogs and Sheep, But

Farm Figures for Beef Cattle

Show Advance.

The average prices paid for hogs and sheep April 15, 1914, were somewhat lower than the average prices paid for these meat animals April 15, 1913, according to figures prepared by the bureau of statistics (crop estimates), United States Department of Agriculture. At the same time, however, the farm price for beef cattle had advanced from $6.08 a hundred, April 15, a year ago, to $6.20 a hundred, an increase of 21 cents, or more than 3 per cent.

An advance in the price of beef cattle is shown for nearly every state.

The average farm price for veal calves April 15 is estimated at $7.68 a hundred, as compared with $7.38 April 15, 1913, an increase of 30 cents a hundred, or about 4 per cent.

The average farm price for veal calves of $7.88 for April 15, 1914, compares a price of $5.96 in 1911, and $6.22 in 1912 on the same date.

The average price per 100 pounds paid to producers of hogs in the United States was $7.50 April 15, which is 14 cents per 100 less than $7.64, last year. The decline was 30 to 40 cents per 100 in all the important hog-producing states, from Ohio to Kansas, but in some of the New England states and practically all of the southern states (excepting Texas and Oklahoma) prices ruled higher than a year ago. The lowest state average price is $6.10 per 100 pounds in Florida, and the highest state average is $9.60 in Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The estimates showed the average farm price per hundred for sheep April 15, 1914, to be $4.96, as compared with $5.16 April 15, 1913, a decrease of 20 cents, or about 3.9 per cent.

The 1914 price of $4.96 for sheep compares with a price of $4.55 in 1911, and $4.57 in 1912, the same date.

THE BRITISH CRISIS XII.—The Church in Wales.

By Frederic J. Haakins.

LONDON, May 15.—In the threatening mazes of the present complications in British politics it must not be forgotten at any time that the parliament act is the real cause of all the trouble. By its terms the house of lords is deprived of its power as an equal branch of the legislature and any bill may become a law that is passed by the commons in three successive sessions of parliament, notwithstanding the adverse votes of the lords.

Only three measures are being attempted under this system—home rule for Ireland, plural voting reform and the disestablishment of the Church of England in Wales. The first, of course, is most important, and has served to arrest the attention of the whole world. The last is of equal importance in the particular nation affected—Wales—and, demerits of a religious question notwithstanding, is the political whirlwind.

The Irish bill and the Welsh bill have been passed in two successive sessions of the house of commons, and have been rejected twice by the lords. They both have passed the commons on their third trip through the commons, and now lack but the third reading to receive the king's assent. The plural voting bill is a whole year behind in this program.

The Church of England in Wales has been a pet measure with Welsh members ever since the disestablishment of the Church of Ireland in 1801. The Church of Ireland was disestablished because the majority of the people of Ireland were Catholics and Presbyterians, and the church was a minority church. The fundamental reason for Wales disestablishment was the same. The majority of the people of Wales are nonconformists. A "nonconformist" in England and Wales is a church member who is not a Roman Catholic and who is not a communicant of the Church of England. In Wales the Calvinistic Methodist church is really a branch of the Presbyterian faith, the Baptist and the Methodist churches together greatly outnumber the Anglicans.

The Welsh nonconformists are very devout, extremely evangelical and great believers in revivalism.

Their religion being largely emotional and experimental, they have not been attracted by the somewhat austere Church of England.

To these fundamental arguments the members who favor disestablishment, some thirty out of thirty-four from Wales, declare that they ought to have the right to manage their own national affairs in religion and that the establishment is alien in spirit and control. No one has advanced the doctrine that church and state of right ought to be separate and independent entities. From the American point of view, in which this separation is accepted without question, the arguments on both sides are interesting in many ways not connected with the precise question at issue.

Disestablishment is accompanied in the bill with disendowment, and therein lies the real trouble. The disestablishment bill means that the four Welsh bishops will no longer have seats in the house of lords, ecclesiastical courts will cease to exist and the ecclesiastical law, as law of the land, will no longer be in effect in the principality.

Disendowment means that all the property of the church, except plate and movable chattels used in worship, shall be transferred to the state.

tion of the bill raked the history of religion in England and Wales from the days of the Roman occupation, and reviewed in effect the whole history of the British nation. But such arguments were not to be all for in the house of commons the bill provoked bitter debate and strong language. It was on this bill that Lord Robert Cecil called the government a charge of more stealing than a thief said it was the meanest bill ever brought into the commons, and Mr. Bonar Law fairly roared in his indignation that such a measure of fraud and robbery should be passed under the parliament act without a direct appeal to the country.

Lord Robert Cecil said that it was absurd to withdraw the establishment and compel the church to look for voluntary contributions for its support at a very time when the nonconformist church recognized that voluntarism in the support of churches was dead. He advocated not disestablishment, but rather the establishment of the other churches as well as of the Church of England.

In reply to this the government supporters pointed out that the church would still have an income of over a million dollars a year from its modern endowments and gifts. The Welsh case was thus sized up by a supporter of the establishment.

"To spend treasury funds on the preservation of rude cromlechs, prehistoric ruins and abbeys, and to withdraw endowments, consecrated by the use of centuries, from the ancient Christian altars of Wales; to beg and pray for subscriptions toward securing a minimum wage for nonconformist ministers, and to impoverish the ancient parochial system which guarantees a living and a universal Christian ministry throughout Wales; to bewail the neglect of public worship and the advance of materialism and to divert to secular uses funds applied from time immemorial to religious purposes, and never more fruitfully employed than they are today; to extol the Welsh nationality and yet humiliate the one national institution which supplies the background of Welsh history and gives value and dignity to Welsh literature—surely, no more violently incongruous spectacle could be imagined than this debate, whatever his religion, could not but be thankful to those fathers of the republic who took such questions out of American statecraft in the very beginning.

and other non-churchmen, including the present leader, Mr. Bonar Law, who made a bitter attack on the cabinet for its Welsh church policy. Yet that there is some truth in the old saying is shown by the fact that all the conservatives have opposed the disestablishment and all the liberals and laborites but two have supported the bill. The opposition was particularly caustic in its references to the fact that the bill could not be carried without the assistance of the Irish nationalists, a majority of whom are Roman Catholics.
